Hen Harrier Poems
Colin Simms — Selected Bibliography

Pomes and Other Fruit, Headland, Sheffield, 1972.

Adders and Other Worms, Headland, Sheffield, 1972.

Modesty (Swaledale Summer), Headland, Sheffield, 1973.

Horcum and Other Gods, Headland, New Malden, 1975.

Rushmore Inhabitation, Blue Cloud Quarterly, Marvin, SD, 1976.

Some Company (Tea at 40), Genera Editions, Newcastle-upon-Tyne, 1979.

Ingenuity (Wensleydale Winter), Shadowcat, Weardale, 1979.

Movement, Pig Press, Durham, 1980.

Big Cats, Islamabad, 1988

Eyes Own Ideas, Pig Press, Durham, 1987.

Shots at Otters, RWC, Reading, 1994.

Beweagle & Other Poems for Basil Bunting, Vertiz, USA, 1996.

Acknowledgments

Some of the poems in this volume previously appeared, often in earlier versions, in the following journals: Angel Exhaust, Fire, Genera, Headland, Northern Democrat, Strath, River Derwent Frieze (1974) and The Yorkshire Derwent. Some were also broadcast on Radios KTCY and KRAB (USA), BBC Radio Leeds, and Look North (Leeds and Newcastle-upon-Tyne). Some poems, often in previous forms, also appeared in publications issued by Cape Clear Bird Observatory, Pig Press (Durham), Many Press (London), Shadowcat (Weardale).

A range of journals, newsletters and newspapers publishing my notes and papers since 1959, mostly British and attention also from broadcasters, until about 1999, in the northern hemisphere, especially British and North American. For companionship and help in the field and for transcribing drafts, named in the texts, but most of all Margaret Hartley and Alexandra Bowman, Brian and Liz West; in the early days also (not in the text) Tom Robson, Alan Hardy, Eric and M.J. Wilson. Articles and letters in the Yorkshire Gazette, Northumberland Gazette, Hexham Courant, Cumberland News, Westmorland Gazette, etc.

For Alexandra Bowman
Contents

A Preface 13
Readers of this book… 14
Before their observations are lost… 16
I follow my friend, Basil Bunting… 18
Winnowing marsh hawks cleave air… 19
As if a ‘comber’ of the sea’s surface 20
like other ground-birds, there in the way of being 20
Harrowed ground 21
where the plains stare, and stare back 22
No mower seemed the sharper 22
Once over Eskdale, as one 23
Hear not only near torrents roar 23
Wind’s partnership (harrier) 24
Discerning her rhythms framing last of night 24
Talon scarring assists in the signature 25
A BlueHawk in January Storm 26
Sweeping The Weel, scene of Tees’ high meanders 27
There are, were, four couples south of Cheviot 27
Lady Moss 28
Our puzzle of the tossing tassels on the July haughs … 29
All the birds in creation 30 continuous motion, of the gulls as over the sea 30 Education 31
Foddering on the Fell (Forster’s, 1960) 32 wing through, not over, learn on her terms 33
Dead-bracken den we sciving bairns warm 33
On an almost-daily route through the High Pennines… 34
– why so long on the same fencepost 35 this ‘santerin’ cloud on its westerly is the westerly 35 on a gust 36
3 Ringtail Poems, with old Tommy 37
A Ring-Tail’s Insistence 38
In grip of winter bitter winds will not bother to stir 38
Remembering Spring Hill Fog 39
Distant from the hayfields its Yellow Rattle 39
August; autumn setting-in with ‘some weather east-coast’ 40
Doubt everything, and equally 40
To Roost 41
“Pullt” children with catapults 41
Ringtail Harrier 42
oxidised stone-stripes run red downscre 42
Harrier in mem. Alan Ridley 43
A Portal for a Mortal 44
Overheard on the ’bus to Hexham 45
‘ALBEDO’ – reflected light off ice and snow 46
Padding Words Stalk 46
Land gone under flood. 47
Until late I follow her regular round some days 47
Her fear transmits to me, as mine to her 48
Read between the lines of our flooding-survey 48
I see her standing stark against the snow 49
(Upper Teesdale) 50
a bird made for the wind-spinning world of their 51
Black Band 52
When summer air “won’t bear mair than a prayer” 53
traipses the bounds of the forest blocks 53
No ‘visitations of locusts’ yet 54
As if out of our bivouac, stiff with no skills 54
Within fine snow now blowing hard 55
She larks along, dotting the line of swallow-holes 55
One of the hunted 56
Talk with a man who had known Black Elk 57
Cock red-grouse red cockades progress a Hare path 58
Harriers come with the swiddening’s* reek-swirls 58
one of the ripple hollows ribbing the hill 59
Their colour becomes their shape, in the fell’s hues 60
Harriers Digesting Rodents at Roost 61
Two hen-harriers in one day, hunting adjacent stints… 62 big brown gled, grey-blue gled, well met… 64
She works the pastures and meadows like a shepherd 65 at her most owl-like (Speotyto) 66
no matter how ‘bleak’ to you and I 67 ‘Blue Hawk’ places 68
learning from him to use the contours 68
piping with, and like, the gawdies over there 69 light flares beyond only its own sake 69
Marsh Hawks. Hawk Mountain on Kittatinny Ridges 70
Marsh Harrier Colorado – Hen Harrier, Lunds 70

_Harrier, not of the bare rockstraw_ 71
Over Baysdale’s Moss and Uswayford’s 71
At a Nest, Cheviot 72

_There, over your hill, where I came ‘nervier’_ 72
one for which, for once 73
He extends limestone-pavement upland, we see 74 graceful as wherever their display courting is 75
_It is in our minds’ convenience to deceive_ 75
One bird’s plunge through it is not 76

_shorn / off barley-tassels_ 77
_Something of the ringtail’s progress arrests, yet_ 78
Seeming animate cottongrass blows 79

_A Blue-Hawk from the blackest hill comes on_ 80
Scrolling silver shaken off stiffer fern fronds 80
_Scarps break out as limestone energies spend_ 81
See how with what John Clare calls a ‘higgling tug’ 81
she flies the envelope of light the artists also seek 82
Dry old birch leaves in his greaves tangled 82

’Ringtail’ Harrier 83

_A curlew’s weakly resistance as at a distance_ 83
_Though a bird of our uplands it’s the still more secure_ 84
_Not high enough to be grey against the blue, a ‘blue-hawk’_ 84
North of the Prairie Provinces 85
We are how/had not, have not, heard about… 85

_Bellini’s landscapes are geometry alive_ 86
_Harriers are good birds for the young to espy_ 86

_Ringtail Reveals_ 87

_wavy-hair grass coronas flexing over the heathers_ 87 _blue, white and yellow_ 88 _ripples that don’t stand out_ 88 _to assist us is parallax of the beat hypnotic_ 89
_We don’t trust memory but we do trust the hill_ 89
_Following swales linking field to field_ 90
Formerly on traditionally-managed haughland 90
_Randomly of all her snapshots, we supposed_ 91
_…now the wind her tormentor_ 92
_one who near the Rings of Thornborough cut the motor_ 92
We went silently through the cemetery

The body steady, level whether rowing along or gliding

Harrier of Storms

Some Harrier Regular Diets

Ringtail

the harrier on the worn old milestone as regular

Curtains of hill fog cross the slopes athwart

Bewcastle ‘Wastes’ and Alston Moor

He announces himself, teetering

Moving out there – the sea of tawny grass breaches

The Goshawk / Harrier Incidents of Nov ’09

Harrier Over

Katharine MacGregor — of The Sneep, Tarset

Jan 20th, 2005

Feb 7th, 2005

April 14th, 2005

Adder Kill

Wind in the thistles whistled

The Hieratic Marsh Hawk (Gaudier)

(They call it pair-bonding, this high-air fondling)

September 20, 1997 with Michael

They didn’t stay to nest…

Their signature

(Spirit)

Hen Harrier Defiance

Ecker Secker Bank, Cautley

because he comes out of fens

Out of hill mist as often before

Close the ’keeper showed me how close

Why Rising Hen Harrier

At Carts Bog harrier plays on the baize

Harrier over the barley field eases

…they’ve shifted their roost, and one and all

Harrier Taking Off Unobserved

Cotman’s Greta Bridge at a moment

one of those days the dew doesn’t lift soon

“Not me, not me, but the wind flying through me”

over all these their ranges light bounced off crystalline snow

Brown, they huddle under distant thunderheads
Harriers Ahead of Events
Upper South Tynedale to uppermost Teesdale
Solway bivouac harrier
In swirling snow an hour ago
Harriers at a Spring Roost rattling her feathers like a ghost in the frost
There is no describing the prairie, even if you find it
Grey cloudless rarely, but all the more welcome for it
A few men and boys climbed up to share

Ringtail
Davy Watson’s Harrier
On the Medicine Line ‘Economic’ forestry has spared this Border glen like other carnivorous birds at the nest, harriers Celebrate with us the hills’ standing up
Clever wing-buffs, swinging closed talons
Harriers to roost, on the ‘Medicine Line’
These hours of brightness polishing snowfield so she learns Harrier. Theatre-Prompter
Off the Sound of Harris
Somewhere within the span, amoebic
hill cattle ship their terracettes in the dark Bolam Howie doesn’t kna en echelon with himself before alarming loud, as a harrier came over the hay
The blue-hawk which, in the Tyne Gap
For an opener-up; a Priorsdale Harrier
The challenge of flying the length of Souter Fell Life careless of convenience
curlew's less-usual bubbling; tremolo
Ringtail Harrier at Otterburn Training Area
From His Home, with Old Alan (Watson)
– “about as much stuffing as an empty potato-sack”
The evening-class-weekend-excursion looks around
As seen from my living-room window
To watch the same hen-harrier on successive days…
Hen Harriers Displaying
Herringshoal skies over from the coast
A First Harrier

Rhythmic as the surges through seedheads, if not as deep not from the highest soaring of the raven silent music of the transecting’s movement
New snow showed, four feet apart memo to Robert MacFarlane (Guardian 26.09.09)
It may be a long long way away
Ringtail Harrier
learning from him to use the contours
Beyond a Desert Lark, sounding strangely loud
Despite distance, size, light, this morning
Blue Hawk Hunting
From the harriers’ roost, again the dispersal
Fallside in November Sun
Mobbed at times by all and the smallest birds around ‘The Hellum’
On Ronnie’s farm, fell fields favoured by fieldfares Tinctures (in the heraldic sense)
over the broad moors the haze often merges the birds
Dihedral
(Signs of Early Autumn, Tynedale)
Often across Shap’s high limestone pastures, by A6
…grasses lying dead, flying bents on the wind
…this is the centenary of Tunguska
…in the dissected castings surprised to find
The cadence of a Strathspey, played slow
Sundaysight
Closeness, of itself, of to what this is over and over
She floats out of the spruce sticks – her pinions
Her own eggs, their ham, her mother’s fresh bread
Harriers at a winter roost; a North Dakota marsh
An Irish Opinion
So many ‘blank’ patrols, especially in winter
Your letter despite its words has found me out
Both wee burns’ and great rivers’ divides
(The year harriers were away)
And at one time she’s a Slack Kite posed like all her kind two gold rings she dangles
She has the wise delicacy
…yet the prairie-states’ statebirds
Harriers give way
When these forests were young they knew more slim harriers
Manitoba 1976 and The Border 1970
Ringtail harrier
“a little of the sky fallen down”
As distant, it seemed, just as distant
Outward from poor England the hen harrier’s lot improves
France in schooldays discovering Limousin and the Auvergne ‘Kyloes’ flick their tails like Kyloe Hills under rain-flails to our ears he whispers
Ahead of the roll of thick smoke over the fell shoulder
“Marsh Hawk” = Hen Harrier (Circus cyaneus) Northwest moorlands, as of The Long Island’s the only puff of wind this rare mid-day Watching the wavy lanky heather they perched on jack-snipe silently up under my next footstep
We call it beautiful: a steady beat propels the scull
Right on the beat, as herons also ease and tease
Blue-Hawk: harvest-moon in beginning-gloaming head-bobbing as an owl
West Cut Black Band, Cross Fell)
Whistling as the bird wheels away, the forming ice
Black Gale, Whale’s Eye, Crossfell Range
Face split double to see binocularly
Of course, as you’d expect, from the northwest
The ringtail carried the plover a few hundred yards…
Ranging
The high plateau where curlew and skylarks rise
Border Forests, English Side
(Urra, 1960)
“as if” he said “this was a ‘Nant’ in Wales”
Harrier and Snow Owl
by RA1388 on Otterburn Ranges it seems someone else’s boyhood now looking for him many an empty road and mile of space Hunderthwaite
Circus cyaneus (‘Ring-tail’) Hen Harrier
Wind Mountains, Wyoming
switchback display, advertisement equivalent to song

Cock hen-harrier takes the brightest cock

Fortieth year of harrier wintering-places

Above a burn’s springs, scanning

in a shimmer off the reservoir, glimmer

We stopped for sandwiches “aboon the muckle toon”

(Immature harrier takes up residence)

Towering

Sweeping low across level haughlands

Widdershins is her quartering now

Watched a ringtail slowly up from the dale because the underground swam out of the ground

If we want the day-fill

Like shite shines after eel-meal tells

Where Rise Watters of Tyne, Tees, Wear

Cock Hen Harrier

Hen Hen Harrier

They say I go for the ‘rarities’ like a trophy-hunter, and I dare

yes, its an ‘arrête’, but it’s not dangerous yet

A Blues For Wannies (two views)

Postscript

27th October 2012 colder, not overcast and cold NNW breeze
A Preface

Colin Simms came to stay near here in the hills, and here, several times over recent years to study the hen harriers and merlins, which I was pleased he showed me... just as he was a link between me and the great poet of Northumberland his friend Basil Bunting... He read me some of his preliminary writing and the finished work I was glad to comment on; as I am now to recommend his projected books gathering these poems and other writings, like the one published a few years ago on the marten. As I have said before, he is one of the few poets... writing proper scientific stuff.

‘Hugh MacDiarmid’ (C.M. Grieve) 1975
Brownshank, Biggar
Readers of this book, perhaps merely browsers and not readers, will perhaps have picked it up because they have heard of some fuss about harriers, hen harriers, an obscure bird of prey, needing help if they are not to become extinct in England, or Britain, and remain so. Their true status: their numbers here at any given time, a matter of controversy…

To readers of this book it may be clear that pessimistic censuses or even estimates of the numbers of hen harriers must be wrong, or the author is crazy or a liar. We are, most or all of us, exposed, dominated by, the mass media’s treatment of ‘information’ in this so-called Information Age. Misinformation is a feature of our age – where political expediency and ‘publicity’ reign supreme.

Recent springs have seen the spectacle of newspaper appeals for information from the public on sightings of hen harriers. That most people, the vast majority, don’t recognise such birds safely seems ignored. ‘The birds are coming back from their winter haunts’ (they are absent from our hills in winter!). This sort of statement is quite wrong. There are more hen harriers on our hills in winter than in summer…

The RSPB must know this and so what they fed, or feed, the local media has to be propaganda; perhaps hoping’ twitchers’ and other bird-aware people will concentrate on getting out early in spring to find ‘returning’ harriers and let the RSPB know about them…

‘Early spring’ in such places, regions, as the North Pennines, the Border hills, the Yorkshire moors and dales, and the Lake District fells is still winter and the harriers still are yet on winter hunting and winter social behaviour – often well into April or even May in some years. Clear-felled and newly planted new ‘forests’ up to several years old are often amongst their best hunting grounds, but rarely attractive to bird watchers, or indeed ramblers, in my experience. Most of my harrier watching until nesting (if any!) links such favoured areas with the usual routes they use, prospecting, between them.

Cautiously also, those least-known and least advertised (but still often threatened) havens, their roosts, approached or watched from a distance rather than visited, are sometimes used year after year and I don’t just mean ‘winter’ after winter, for there is often a small but significant presence of non-breeding birds about throughout the ‘summer’. I’ve noticed a tendency for some cock birds in this category to display, at least a little; and this can be confusing especially as some ‘genuine’ potential breeding cocks display nowadays much less, or noticeably less conspicuously, than their forebears used to – it may be that they have learned that breeding success may have better chances if they keep a low profile.

And we must not suppose that these watchers, ‘amateur’ or ‘professional’, who see and mark the remarkable ‘sky-writing’ displays of the cock bird over or near potential breeding-sites are innocent in the critical matter of some success for the hen harrier at home. Other people watch the watchers watching for harriers, and the information passed about isn’t always ‘safe’, and so the birds aren’t. More than once in recent years, and overall some twenty times in sixty years, I’ve known bird watchers, including established scientists, wittingly or unwittingly betray harrier nest-sites to predators (and not only avian ones – egg collectors and other menaces).

§
Before their observations are lost, were lost, much information about harriers was, is, available. In the ’sixties I met Sir Herbert Read, with his long and deep knowledge of (especially) the western part of the Vale of Pickering and its tributary dales, in York and usually on the premises of the Yorkshire Philosophical Society and in the Yorkshire Museum nearby, asking him – as I had in the late ’fifties, for memories of harriers in the Vale in his youth and since. At Muscoates Grange they had been regular in winter over the fields, he couldn’t say which harrier. That they nested occasionally in the Vale – he thought in the carr lands – and also about the heads of Farndale just where I’d been directed in 1961 by a landowner there, Richmond Brown. These observations, I’m sure, could be repeated over many landscapes of the North Country. But this is hearsay.

Notoriously the Hen Harrier, and other birds of prey, often afford us glimpses only, before they are gone from sight. ‘Out of sight is out of mind’. I find the distant and peripheral vision of many, for example in my evening-classes, 1960s-80s, do not pick them up despite their style… These observations started in the early ’fifties, and a few of the early ones may relate to Montagu’s Harrier rather than the Hen Harrier, though I believe I have now eliminated nearly or quite all notes and verses not carefully diagnosed, critically determined, of Circus cyaneus. Montagu’s Harriers were not rare during the ’fifties and ’sixties especially, in parts of North-east England particularly. I was brought up in a hard school of disciplined ornithologists; a number of them listed in acknowledgements throughout this book, and have my own strict standards.

To some extent, these verses serve another function in reporting the presence of a little-known member of our fauna – as my previous works on Goshawk, Marten, Otter, Gyrfalcon have: a hope is that anyone reading or hearing my works will gain, if only ‘accidentally’, some useful knowledge of the behaviour, occurrence and distribution of these harriers. But amongst the many aspects hardly touched-on here are ‘dog fights’ observed, rarely but I think significantly, between hen harriers and buzzards (including Rough-legged Buzzard) and hen harrier and red kites (from introductions) in the North of England since 1970 and especially since the spread of the Common Buzzard and then of the Red Kite. Usually the buzzard or kite has repulsed, but not injured, the harrier. I doubt our so-called ‘conservation’ lobby has considered this factor in the current scarcity of hen-harriers… even our most-open spaces are limited…
Reginald Wagstaffe, Keeper of Zoology at Liverpool Museums and familiar with the Isle of Man and its recorded ornithology, had more reason to be surprised than I had, whose experience was limited to several visits to the island since 1947*, that no harrier was recorded in the excellent and careful Ralfe’s Birds of the Isle of Man (1905), and we wondered why this was so. We had both seen Hen Harrier there and could not imagine they had just discovered the place since the ’thirties! Nevertheless, these are my first published observations of harriers there, ‘authorities’ having rejected earlier ones…

§

* For birds and the spring and autumn migrations (and motorcycle races), for finding merlin nests etc., since 1951 and insect fauna since 1953 (including Stenobothrus stigmaticus in the ’60s (see Ragge).
'I follow my friend Basil Bunting in believing, from experience, that information is carried best by poetry, verse. We did not, do not, know why; and leave the question, with others: as poets we have enough to do; but we assert this particular advantage of poetry, verse, over prose. Often an originator in the forms of his verse, at other times an adapter of accepted shapes Bunting insisted on the “music” of his work; that it should be heard. My work is not poetry on his level but it is something else as new; a fresh genre of natural-history verse-making dealing with experience of a single species; a magnificent but little-known bird of prey surprisingly still frequently seen over a large part of the earth – I have watched it in fourteen countries and a range of habitats – most of them the wide open spaces the hen-harrier graces yet in an increasingly “developed” world.

Cursed by some “critics” for putting-up barriers I’ve put a few rough notes in better order from those years of Bunting anecdotes and stories; engaged at the time with harriers between the North Tyne and the Border bracken beds in glens, cover at forest-edges I had explored in the ’sixties and ’seventies especially Tarrasdale and the Head in the west to where the gleds hid in the Pentlands in the east and places he wanted to go, Middle” and Cheviot the Simonsides and Wannies, the heads of Coquet “where wild goats might flourish; men least”. managed to find one place near enough to the road where I could show him their nest as in Wark Forest, but on untrodden bluff where Dryas and Trientalis showed their faces to the east in the morning, south at “opening time” “these are the kinds of blooms I like the best” he laughed, back in our rooms, “but do you suppose, if we had stayed, they’d have known when to close? Children at the table, he’d indulge in a mime of mother harrier preparing prey for food, tearing and offering pieces to each of her brood (several usually, like ours at “Striding Edge”) “Grub up,” shouted Basil, cutting each wedge of beef plate pie while I ladle gravy and greens. We’d marvelled at their wavy flight to their nests, “their mates keeping cavey”.
Winnowing marsh hawks cleave air don’t push it aside under rounding-up ringing over migrating sandhill cranes high, ablaze on mornings haze nor, with the eagled and thunderbirds are they tempted to ride thunder, when they come to a merging with the place where fables start, the fluttering heart where the white one comes-on Godlike they’ll be seen as the ‘best of all’ the better to learn aerodynamics from than the flattering, the tables of Lilienthal.

With the ease to rehearse the spring for meadowlarks and all the buzzards by deliberate careless showing-off prancing and blowing-off sky-dancing all the strong silent stark stalk everyone awaits the vision-trancing.
As if a ‘comber’ of the sea’s surface reached further than all other waves and, falling back, gave a seething sound her wing shuffles overlay all around;
chirping grasshoppers had been starting-up.

Thus at the ill-fated Knarsdale nest that year, even low-flying has not blest tactics; man’s clumsy interference

Some years’ tumbledown with their nettle, bracken ignorance and prejudice crumble, meddling slacken

like other ground-birds, there in the way of being something hidden behind the range of hill as Margaret and I came upon them, seeing suddenly over the crest “the blue hawk” swinging in and away through all what had been still and he serving two nests of young, two “ring-tails” both in view from up here. What if he fails?
Harrowed ground

down off the Blackamoor
on the turning fields
over the magnetite mines
a single bank-vole yields to three hours’ surveillance oatfields’ smoke harvest-sparrows as suddenly as he appears, sodden seeds spill where he steers –

his rudders’ wake parting.
No attempt at chase of those
A roe’s head’s up, and starting.

Weary, not expecting further encounter this evening homing from the harriers a sparrowhawk on an opposite saunter almost collides head-on over the barrier of the Lang Dyke. We stop to banter.

for Alexandra
May 17/18, 2011
where the plains stare, and stare back solitary bird stirs turning their space bird that the strong sun paints black as crows, giving way to her greater grace; who, like them, saw cultivation over common to reduce her sort and all other such variety and ‘ecology’ toward monoculture, mammon…

June, already faded of that year’s niggardly seasons offers mainly worms, wireworms, a few finches a proud bird of prey’s poor picking, thin rubble we’ve reduced the surface of Mother Earth to Arable stiff stems of poor cereals, ‘permanent pasture’, converted the top predators into scavengers
– this one’s future: doomed, but only a parable…

No mower seemed the sharper
– the ring-tail we named “harper”, hers hunting no random thing neatly as the ploughman’s skill octaves on her passing-strings scoring the sides of the hill where the ling-owl is stitching.
Wind in their wings differing to our ears. And from grasses subsong. Notes that all belong – their harmonies ring hill still our humming begins, and passes to the mind of each, a song wordless, I hear you sing…

A.J. Munby of York; for a descendant, listening with me (1968)
(Munby: straightest plough lines seem curved on any hill)