SAMPLER

Epic Series
Also by Éléna Rivera

Light Tremor, Estepa Editions, Artist Book, Kate van Houton, Paris, France
Le Souci Formel/The Formal Concern, Chaplet #211, Belladonna, Brooklyn, NY
Disturbances in an Ocean of Air (French/English, translated by the author), Artist Book, concept and lithography, Kate van Houton, Estepa Editions, Paris, France
The Perforated Map, Shearsman Books, Bristol
A Test of Labor, in Labor Poetic Labor! 2: into the archive, essaypress.org, Athens, OH
Atmosphered, Oystercatcher Press, Cambridge
Overture, http://www.metambesen.org/books, Annandale-on-Hudson, NY
On the Nature of Position and Tone, Fields Press, Chicago, IL & New York, NY
Remembrance of Things Plastic, LRL e-editions, San Marcos, TX
In Respect of Distance, Beard of Bees #45, Chicago, IL
Mistakes, Accidents and a Want of Liberty, Barque Press, Cambridge
Disturbances in An Ocean of Air, Phylum Press, Hamden, CT
Suggestions at Every Turn, Seeing Eye Books, Los Angeles, CA
Unknowne Land, Kelsey Street Press, Berkeley, CA
Wale, or The Corse, Leave Books, Buffalo, NY

Translations

Body Was by Isabelle Garron, Litmus Press, Brooklyn, NY (forthcoming)
The Ink’s Path by Bernard Noël, Cadastre8zero, artwork by François Rouan, Paris
The Rest of the Voyage by Bernard Noël, Graywolf Press, St. Paul, MN
Parting Movement, Constantly Prevented, Isabelle Baladine Howald, Oystercatcher Press
The Pain of Returning, by Isabelle Baladine Howald, Mindmade Books, Los Angeles, CA
Secret of Breath by Isabelle Baladine Howald, Burning Deck Press, Providence, RI Eléna Rivera

Epic Series

Shearsman Books
Acknowledgments

My gratitude and thanks to the following editors/publishers where earlier versions of these poems were first published: Kristin Prevallet, Juliana Spahr and Mark Wallace, et. al. for publishing Wale; or The Corse, Leave Books; Kathleen Fraser for selecting Unknowne Land for the Frances Jaffer book award published by Patricia Dienstfrey and Rena Rosenwasser of Kelsey St. Press; and to Dale Going who published an early variant of The Wait; for Homer’s Penelope, EM Press.

My admiration and gratitude to Carol Snow for her feedback and comments on the manuscript and whose friendship has been indispensable. I also wish to thank Denise Newman, Russell Switzer, Myung Mi Kim, Denise Liddell Lawson, Thom Donovan, Anne Carson, Kathleen Hill, Alison Bundy, Joan Retallack, and Gabrielle Civil for their support and art which has buoyed me over the years.

My appreciation and thanks to Tony Frazer, indefatigable publisher, for his generous work on behalf of this book, and for all he has done and is doing for poetry.

And finally many thanks to Rebab El Sadek for her artwork and Scott David Gordon for the use of his photograph for the cover of this book.
Contents

Wale; or The Corse / 7

Unknowne Land / 37
   Fire / 41
   Earth / 49
   Water / 61
   Air / 71
   The Sphere / 81

The Wait; for Homer’s Penelope / 95

Notes / 136

Acknowledgments / 139
I went out in the woods. Instead

was mentioned, an action

revived. Going into the unknown with which I am fully familiar

You remember the seeds? …

John Cage

when you become attuned to your attunement
to scarring, then you’re on your way

Fred Moten
WALE;

or

The Corse

SAMPLER
“Open your lips; don’t open them simply. I don’t open them simply.”

A book might spill out, desperate, moody savage, spouting off white characters, until death do us part. She cannot open her lips simply because it would be heroism. The words caught in her throat and the out pour when and if it came would leave a pale and turbid wake.

(A toad stuck on scotch tape.)

She drinks water. Open so that she may enter. She wanted to step into a world of walruses and whales, but the war stopped any further plans from forming. She asks you to take care of the gift of her abandonment.

Alone at her table, lips pressed together, the writing shuts us out and brings her in. She asks us to be a dream which cracks open.
I
knots
knew it came critiqued
I
starved
in one place
wore the same thought that woeful way
lost
“Whole world seems against me if I could just explain. Man I love has left me because I called…”

Dust on the window. Blue light catches the red of the lamp (turned off). She claims her ring another time. Woe. Woe. Woe. Woe. Woe. Woe. Woe. This man interested her at once. Translating all things to numbers, the cat waved. He came over after playing the set and asked, are you in my distance? Did the man know that the call caused bombs to drop into another child’s backyard? He took delight in departure.
driven

smoke moved

crated

different

grew in many

an ignorant whim

to please
She gives deeper joy, consumes more swiftly.

She eats as though she was starving. Hair in place. Her mother associated all that was ugly with what was hateful. She hated her stomach (which “She” do you mean?). She sat in the corner where we put her, facing a wall. Your friendship was her sorrow. Pain went both ways. The stolen, stolen was the measure of grief. Her house was bombed in half. Had to run. Had to run. Had to run. In half a person cannot be. Not fully be. No fill. She asked if she could eat more. (Again which “She” do you mean? Make yourself clear.) She said yes—sausages, eggs, toast. Disgust. The Rise was reflected in all these eyes that stared. Took sides for survival. The glass is empty and being filled was never understood. SATIATED. The woman dressed in tattoos said that word, said there was nothing like it. She held the girl in her arms. You can’t white that out.
a whole

occupied

I watched

a travesty

trea ted

To be furious is to be frightened out of fear.

How many more until we begin mourning? She bleeds into her Thai food, into…. Her breasts swell slightly.

They were associated by color; a paper clip holds them together. The air weighs, weighs heavily, and whether it is reality or not, she can never entirely settle.

We insisted on a gate. How could she? Leaves were pressed in a thick book, and later she drew them with children.

The sun shines in at the window and women were open (soft skin easily bruises). How much longer will her father continue to shake her? She can't listen to doors slam. Slam!

The bar was crowded, cramped. People in leather jackets. The man never returned the ring the woman lost (though they laid down, laid down—not standing, as to kill time—and he hurt her). Fortunately pain lasts only a short time and Civilization is what was best and most suitable for all.
out

side

pressed

worry molded

pain

I

late

lament
“Her cry silences whole vocabularies of names for things.”

There is no access when the destruction is so great. Only leisure will bring you towards the knowledge of who you are. The shade is half open, just enough to brighten the room so as to not need a lamp. Craving will manifest itself in arranging and rearranging (enters ghost). You did this to your children. She does this to her compositions. Will you be her audience if she promises to be soft enough, smell good enough, curve her body into yours enough? The woman “sold her soul” for attention (she must resign her life into the hands of he who steers the boat). A mouse is ineffective, especially when still. Strum your guitar and you’ll hear in it an echo (with hands that steer). Perhaps, she wets her hair so that it will bounce back.
tape
tape
book
book
letter
letter
candle
candle
wail
wail
pen
pen log log saliva
saliva
sheet
sheet
radio
radio
knife
knife
The woods chopped down describe seduction to the lonely.

The audience which we are becomes that leaf and then falls into waterfalls (or something else) flakes off down the highway.

A pregnant lesson in solemn tones. The continual tolling of a bell in a ship that is foundering at sea in a fog.

She is still (still, still, still) and puts herself into seclusion.