Also by M T C Cronin

Zoetrope – we see us moving the world beyond the fig Everything Holy Mischief-Birds
Talking to Neruda’s Questions Bestseller
My Lover’s Back ~ 79 Love Poems
The Confetti Stone and other poems beautiful, unfinished – PARABLE/SONG/CANTO/POEM < More or Less Than > 1-100

M T C CRONIN

Shearsman Books
Exeter to the apricot tree, the astonishing arch and other 'wandering landmarks'

(with thanks to I.C. and C.V.) not simply the stream but they who thought of following and not just running water – how concerned, sometimes, a group of people with the movements of the clouds ‘follow me’ means three, the speaker a page of water and they, addressed, wavering, as the third beckons as well as it can, hidden not just, along the way, vines finding light and its myth, as myth, invisible, unplants one life for another, but the unrecognizable fruit they will test with their teeth for the answer to the tongue’s question the tongue, the tongue, steps backwards into a web respun daily by an appetite that thinks never of holiness the tongue makes them miniature and blind the tongue caresses and ruins their splendour in its own land it speaks the language of stones helped by the small swallow the stone is lifted from what is crushed and lifted to emptiness, its futurity, lifted with its earthquake to the place where it is learning to speak, to the roof of the mouth, that cave of fullness which can feel the emptiness with which it is filled covered with breath covered with breath this was their magnifying glass, and not just glass, but the metaphors, what they see through, what they see through what they see, one of the Amaryllis, the face, and the petal is like a tear dropping down, when fences come down it is no longer possible to pass from one side to another incarnate labouring longing the reason won’t suffice it isn’t simply the difference between action and rest – there is solace in the sky’s reflection and words will serve any purpose their meaning can divine – but following to the place where things and words leave disappearance lonely and smooth as a brow that is finished for the night with dreams and the place where they rest is nothing like daybreak – all is invisible in this morning that has forgotten the night they clamber forward thinking about the concept of forgiveness, the heart forgives, and not only that but the highest fruit in the tree hanging like a spindle-shaped shell in an ocean of sky, the heart leaps, and high excitement about what you can see through a magnifying glass if only it was not covered with breath, the heart sees though love is blind, and then the storm of hair over the pillow and the ship as it approaches the rocks, the heart breaks, think, pure, refusing, burning, and ache in love, the longest eclipse of the self, and the heart described in writing always makes the heart look gaunt, literally the real heart how surprised they are if is said something that is not written down and not simply the kiss but the lips not simply the tapping but the door not simply the wind but whispering perpetually through the trees not simply the stone but the stone a face, a wall, smooth, rough, always broken these gentle cleaving feet of the spider not just the spider with its web – one like this but different, one unlike this but the same – but the ant rumbling a smaller ground – one small bit of waiting over, a lifetime – before or after the event, neither what has been or what is to come evident in that small word, event, but a new world spun there, not mistaken, but still, think, simply of another, and not just the ant but the cosmos – the enormous miniature of the universe shaking bones in its palm – not just bowel, brain and chest but, think, planets and heroes