If you're planning your graduation candy table, you'll need to consider several details. Firstly, choose colors that fit your party theme and make sure they're consistent throughout the decorations. If you plan to spray paint the sticks, do it at least a day in advance and allow them to dry completely for 24 hours. Next, determine how many labels you need for your candy buffet. Once you know this, you can start working with the sticks that will be used in each of your candy bar buckets. It's essential to work on steps 1 & 2 before starting this project. To cut the graduation candy table sticks to size, use scissors and cut each pack in half, creating 8 sticks. For added style, consider using chalkboard tags or clothespins, which come with both written and attached options. For an extra pop of personality, add a themed element to your candy table labels by inserting stick graduation balloons or picks into the balloon sticks. This will make each bucket stand out from the others. You can also enhance the look by adding LED lights or glow sticks to the buckets.
