DID YOU KNOW?

The vintage Cadillac memorabilia featured in our décor are a nod to the old Fleetwood Metal Body Company, which opened in 1909 and was world-renowned for building some of the finest hand-built automobile bodies money could buy with customers ranging from Hollywood's elite to famous crime bosses to international royalty. It was purchased by Fisher Body Company in 1925 and joined General Motors. While the Fleetwood brand is most often associated with Cadillac, these bodies were placed on chassis from manufacturers such as Packard, Rolls Royce and Duesenberg, to name a few. Local production ended in 1931 when operations were shifted to Detroit, but General Motors maintained the Fleetwood name on its largest and proudest Cadillac models through 1996.
