

Final Cremation Options

Perhaps the most fundamental and personal decision when choosing cremation is finding a final disposition or resting place for your loved one's cremated remains. Cremation offers a number of options for final placement, each involving considerations from cost through the impact on future generations. Here are some of your options for a final resting place:

- Burial – Burying an urn in a cemetery remains a popular choice for families. It provides a permanent resting place and lasting memorial for generations of families and friends to freely visit and cherish memories.
- Columbarium Niche – An aboveground structure protected by glass, marble, granite or bronze, a columbarium niche also provides a permanent remembrance and central location where family and friends can visit and pay their respects.
- Home Placement – Some families choose to display or keep the urn in a private or prominent place in their home. The closeness can be comforting for family members, and is an option for those who may consider relocating in the future.
- Scattering – Scattering the cremated remains in a special place is a choice that is significant but permanent. Some families may choose to scatter only a portion of the cremated remains and keep the rest as a more permanent keepsake.
- Keepsake and Jewellery – There are many choices of memorial keepsakes and jewellery that hold small portions of cremated remains, providing multiple family members with individual mementos to treasure or allowing for placement of the cremated remains in various settings.
