2 Prepare: How to Determine What & How Much

Measure the perimeter of your yard, but first:

- Confirm your property line.
In order to get accurate measurements, you need to know exactly where your property line is.
- Locate underground utilities.
Underground utility lines will affect where your fence posts can be placed.
- Research local zoning codes and restrictions.
Some cities and neighborhoods have restrictions on fencing.
- Check for obstructions.
- Mark and measure your yard.
(utilize the grid found on page 10 of this guide)

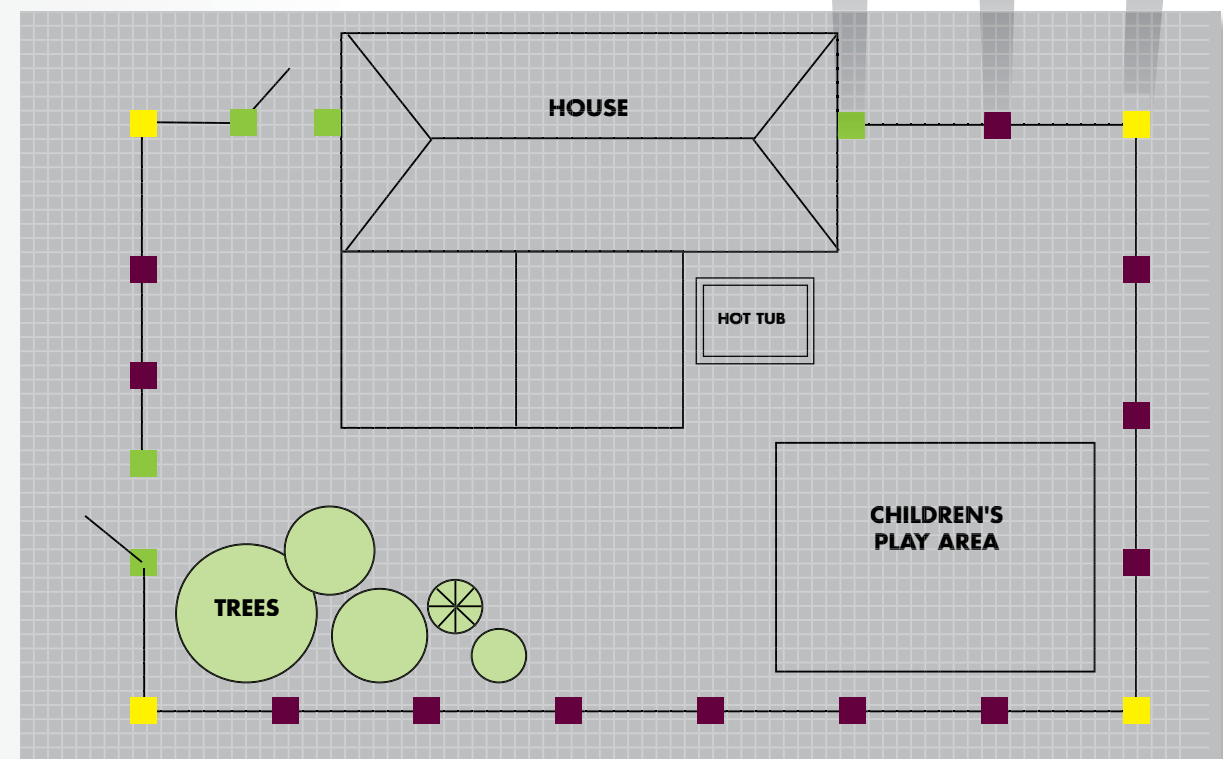

Note: Where there are sections of yard less than 8 feet in length, panels will need to be cut down.

Now that you have selected your type of fence, you are ready to create a shopping list of materials and draft your task list.

- Place a stake in each corner of your yard and every 8 feet, as that is where posts will go.
- Add up all your measurements and divide by 8, as most panels are sold in 8 foot sections, or utilize an online fencing calculator to determine the quantity of panels you will need.
Note: Home Series aluminum fence comes in 6 foot sections
- Think about where you would place your gates if you are going to have any.

- Count the number of corners of your yard and that is the number of corner posts you need - write that number down.
- Count the number of stakes you put in the ground every 8 feet and that is the number of line posts you will need - write that number down.
- If your fence stops are your house, a tree or a gate that is an end post - count how many you will need - write that number down.
Note: modify your calculations if your fence panels will not be 8ft. sections

COLOR KEY

Purple Square: Line Post: Posts with holes on two opposite sides to connect fence sections in a line.

You have all the products that you need for your fence, you are ready for installation.
