A WORD FROM DR. STEWART

What Are You So Afraid Of?

The famous patient line that I have grown accustomed to over the last 29 years in practice is "I hate the dentist but I don't hate you Dr Stewart, no offense."

It's an old line but it seems to never grow old though and why is that? Dentistry has changed so much. It is faster, more advanced. We have better techniques, better anesthetics, lasers, white fillings, digital scans-no goop! And yet I'm still hearing that same old line. What is it then?

Has it ever occurred to you that when you think about something, you are no longer "there" looking at that something? Thinking takes you out of present time and sends you back to other times, especially the bad experiences, and rehashes them in your mind. I believe dental fear is not from what is in front of you but what you think is in front of you. It is the mystery you create when you think about it. Remember those times as a child when you swore there was a scary monster under your bed but when you turned the light on you felt better? Dentistry is that monster under the bed.

I have had great success over the years helping patients get over their dental fears just by getting them back to present time. How do I do that? First really caring about you,. Secondly, co-diagnosing with you using 3D models, photos and X-rays so the mystery that you've been worrying about is brought to your understanding in the present. Thirdly, making sure you don't go back to those past experiences when you are having procedures done. It is that simple and magical.

Hope this helped!
