This walk, one of the best on the Lizard Peninsula, takes you along low cliffs to the promontory of Lowland Point, then past the dramatic remains of Dean Quarry. A short detour brings you to the attractive square at St Keverne, or you can take a shorter route past Roskilly's and back along an ancient church path through woodland glades and medieval farms.

Along the way you can discover a 2nd century AD saltworks, see the the infamous Manacles rocks, and search for iron ore washed up from the 1932 wreck of the Ocklinge. An information board at Lowland Point explains the fascinating geology of this Site of Special Scientific Interest.

Refreshments are available at pubs and cafés in Coverack and St Keverne, and at Roskilly's organic farm. Parts of this walk can be muddy in winter, and the route includes a steep climb up steps near Dean Quarry.
