From Cradle to Grave: Are Early Life Traumas Reversible in Later Life? *

This symposium brings together a diverse set of papers that test continuity and discontinuity theory to understand the role of cumulative disadvantages, adaptability, and resilience to early life traumas and later life outcomes. Discussions will focus on modifying factors and future avenues for therapy, interventions, and inquiry.

Thurs, 8/9 - 11am to 12:50pm

How has Psychology Prepared You for Aging?

Led by Dr. Joseph Gaugler, a panel of practitioners, academics, and researchers will discuss aging from Eastern and Western perspectives, and provide insights from their own work and experiences on how to plan for retirement, disability, and dying.

Fri, 8/10 - 10am to 10:50am

New Frontiers in Biopsychosocial Research and Stress Interventions *

The papers in this symposium will discuss the new frontiers in stress research and describe stress-reduction programs and interventions designed for all ages. Dr. Steve Zarit will discuss these current trends and provide future vision and recommendations for improving the design of interventions for stress and coping.

Sat, 08/11 - 9am to 10:50am

A Guide on Best Practices for Running An Intervention

You may already understand the basics of how to run an intervention, but the details are very important. This session will provide the audience with best practices on how to conduct an intervention or randomized controlled trial. Topics include recruitment strategies, maintaining fidelity, avoiding placebo effects, statistical analysis, and how to translate a lab-controlled intervention to the real world.
