Students are taking the situation very seriously

Percent answering “a lot or a great deal”

- How serious are you taking COVID-19? 99%
- Are you practicing social distancing? 82%
- How much has your life been affected? 78%
- How much has your mental health been affected? 45%

Working students

- Income remains stable: 26%
- Decrease in income (but not complete loss): 41%
- Complete loss of income: 26%

Emotions felt over the past few months relate to COVID

- Uncertainty or anxiety around school: 80%
- Anxied: 74%
- Isolated: 69%
- Uncertainty or anxiety around work: 68%
- Sad: 68%
- Hopeful: 30%
- Connected to community: 12%

What aspects are negative emotions most tied to?

- School: 69%
- Finances: 46%
- Work: 44%
- Social life: 44%
- Family: 35%
- Health: 25%

Students are considering major changes due to COVID-19

- Not returning to school at all: 17%
- Switching to online classes permanently: 10%
- Changing major: 8%
- Transferring schools: 8%

Are students spending more or less time on school work compared to before?

- End of March: 48% less time on schoolwork, 18% more time on schoolwork
- Mid-May: 31% less time on schoolwork, 32% more time on schoolwork

Newly online courses are not giving students enough interaction with instructors.

- 39% percent satisfied with level of interaction with instructor

Only 46% of students have been surveyed or asked to provide feedback since pandemic began.

Good news

Most students think campuses are taking the right amount of precautions.

Two separate surveys were sent to OnCampus Research's student panel. The first fielded March 24-30, 2020 and received 2,406 responses. The second fielded May 7-14, 2020 and received 2,919 responses. OnCampus Research is the research division of the National Association of College Stores.