LOCAL INFORMATION.

The situation of the Parish of Beckenham is ten miles from London and two from Bromley. It lies wholly within the County of Kent, and is in the Western (or Sevenoaks) Parliamentary Division of the County, and the Rural Deanery of Dartford. There are two lines of Railway having stations, viz., the London Chatham and Dover, and the South Eastern. A new branch of the former, from Shortlands to London viâ Nunhead, was opened in 1892.

The name Beckenham, traced to its root-meaning, signifies a village on a river, Bec being the Saxon for a river and Ham for a village. The word has, like most other things, become somewhat changed with changing time and vicissitudes of language. It is called in the Domesday Survey Bacheham; and in "Textus Roffensis" Becceham. The place is described as being in the possession of one Ansgot, of Rochester, who held it of the notorious Odo, Bishop of Bayeux. It was taxed at two Fulings, and the land consisted of eight caracutes, each of about 220 acres. There were two ploughs on the demesne, 22 villians, and eight bordars, who employed eight ploughs and had half employment for another. The estate comprised 12 acres of meadow land, four slaves, and pannage for 60 hogs. In the time of Edward the Confessor, and afterwards, it was valued at £9; in the Domesday at £13.

The parish has a very eccentric outline on the western side, where it runs in the shape of a tongue of land, right up to the Crystal Palace, separating, in its course, the parish of Sydenham, or Lewisham and the Hamlet of Penge. This extension is very curious, and not easy to account for, but there exists a quaint legend that attempts an explanation. A dead body, it is said, was once found somewhere near the present Crystal Palace, and as the parishes on either side had refused to take charge of it, Beckenham stepped in and removed the body. For this service, so the story goes, the interloper claimed the land for a certain number of feet on either side of the body, and a strip of the same width back to the original boundary of the parish.

The three Almshouses, adjoining the Parish Church, were founded in 1694, by Anthony Rawlins, for three poor widows, each of whom receives a small sum of money weekly. In 1881 these houses were restored and enlarged.

The river Beck flows alongside High-street for some distance, but this is now culverted over by the road.

Much of the former rustic beauty of the place has fallen a prey to the builder, and to the necessities of increased traffic and widened roads. The approach to the village from Penge, not many years ago, wound through a splendid avenue of trees; Bromley-road has been changed from a shady to an open thoroughfare; Church-hill has been deprived of that wealth of wood and foliage, which in past years made it a perfect picture.

There stood at one time a cage and stocks in the centre of the village, close to where the "JOURNAL" office now stands, and the pound and parish pump existed until some fifteen years ago.

The Local Government of Beckenham

Began, as in other places of the kind, with the Common Law Vestry, which system was followed, some 25 years ago, by the Rural Sanitary Authority. In course of time the Parochial Committee succeeded, and in its turn gave way, in 1878, to the Local Board, which ended its existence with the year 1894. In December of that year the new Local Government Bill came into operation. A redistribution of Wards was effected, by which means two new wards were created and four additional representatives added to the governing body, and a District Council was formed, consisting of 19 Members. The Chairman occupies a seat on the Bench of Magistrates by virtue of the Chairmanship.

Kent County Council.

Beckenham sends two representatives to the Kent County Council, and as the population is pretty equally divided between the Alexandra and the Beckenham polling districts for Parliamentary purposes, these political divisions are adopted for County Purposes, and one Member is assigned to each district. The first election of County Councillors took place in January, 1889, when Mr. A. H. Baker (a member of the Urban Council), and Mr. A. J. Baker, of Westgate, Foxgrove-road, Beckenham (a member of the School Board) were elected. Both gentlemen were re-elected without opposition in January, 1895. The returning officer is the sheriff of the county. Chairman, Sir J. Farnaby Lennard, Bart. ; Clerk, Mr. W. B. Prosser, Sessions House, Maidstone.

School Board.

In 1875 the Education Act was put into operation in Beckenham, and a School Board was formed, consisting of seven members, all of whom retire triennially, but in 1890 the power to increase to nine was granted. The present members are : Chairman, Rev. H. F. Wolley, M.A., St. Mary's Vicarage, Shortlands ; Vice-Chairman, Mr. A. J. Baker, Westgate, Foxgrove-road ; Rev. H. Arnott, The Rectory ; Mr. J. S. George's Parish Church

This noble edifice was commenced in 1884, and completed (with the exception of the spire) in 1887. On the same general site stood the former Parish Church, a building of considerable antiquity.

The structure, which is one of the most handsome modern churches in Kent, is an edifice of Kentish ragstone, in the late decorated style, from designs by Mr. W. G. Bartleet F.R.I.B.A. a resident of Beckenham, and has cost including stained glass windows, organ, and other ornaments, about £25,000. It comprises pentagonal apsidal chancel, with organ chamber and vestries on north, and on the south a chapel with semi-circular apse, called the "Cator" chapel, transepts and clerestoried nave with side aisles. The chancel has a credence and sidilia on the south side, and a seat for the Archbishop on the north ; the high altar is of oak enriched with tracery ; (its coverings were worked and presented by ladies of Beckenham), and above it are gradines of alabaster ; the chancel fittings and organ screens are of carved oak ; dividing the chancel and nave is a beautiful low wall of marble and alabaster. Hanging in the chancel are seven Sanctuary Lamps of great beauty. The "Cator" chapel has an altar of carved oak, and an ancient piscina (found embedded and bricked up in the old church) has been placed in the chapel, and is used at the daily Eucharist. The exterior of the chancel has an enriched stone parapet with pinnacles, and on the eastern gable of the nave is a turret, containing a sanctus bell. The great tower is at present incomplete. The organ is a magnificent instrument, erected by Forster and Andrews, of Hull. The stained glass windows are of great beauty and interest, and were presented by members of the congregation.

In connection with the old Parish Church, while there was much of antiquity and interest, there was little or no architectural beauty to commend it. The windows, tablets and memorial brasses removed from the old church have been re-instated in the new building.

Some remarkable bequests have been made to the Parish Church, but in 1880 the Charity Commissioners revised the local charities, and abolished certain customs which had grown to be mere eccentricities, and the amalgamated funds are now devoted to the maintenance of the Alms Houses and their inmates ; to the advancement of the further Education of children from Public Elementary Schools ; and to the general benefit of the poor. Mr. W. H. Lendon is Treasurer, and Mr. Wm. Lawrence, High-street, Clerk.

Congregational Church

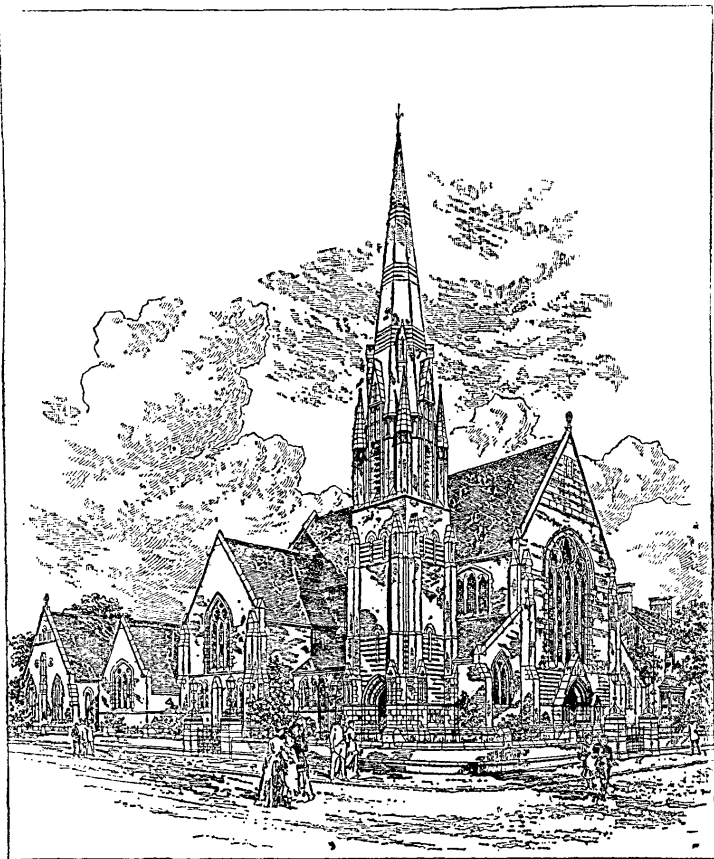

In 1878 the Congregationalists opened for Divine Worship, at Oakhill, near the Bromley-road, a substantial School Church. There is now erected on the adjoining site a very handsome Church, which seats 600 persons, and is divided into nave, aisles and transepts. The nave is separated from the aisles and transepts by an arcade of arches carried on granite pillars, over which the clerestory is well carried up so as to obtain large clerestory windows. At the end of the nave an apsidal recess is formed, in which are placed the pulpit and Communion table. In the south transept an arched recess contains the organ; and the choir seats are also placed in this transept. There are two main entrances to the Church, one in the centre of the front to Crescent-road, and one in the tower. The vestries, &c., are between the end of the Church and the Schoolroom. A church parlour, to accommodate about 80 persons, adjoins the northern transept of the Church, with main approach from Oakhill-road, and doorways from the Church and Schoolroom. The style adopted is early English Gothic, and the architects have grouped the Church and the School building so as to form one whole. A tower and spire is carried up to a height of 114 feet, and forms a conspicuous object for some distance. The flooring of the Church is laid with a slight ascent from the pulpit. The principal elevations are faced with Kentish ragstone. The organ was purchased from the Weigh House Chapel, City, and, with the additions made since, it is a very fine instrument. There are several useful societies in connection with the congregation.

Baptist Chapel

The Elm Road Chapel is a fine building of red brick, fronting the main road to Penge. It possesses some considerable ecclesiastical character and dignity, and consists of a nave 82ft long by 32ft broad, exclusive of the side aisles, chancel (in which is placed the baptistry,) pulpit, organ, and east and west transept which increase the width at that end of the chapel to 88ft. The building will seat over 800.

The style of the architecture is 13th century English Gothic. The tower is of a type somewhat rare in England, being met with only in a few churches in Northamptonshire ; it is 100ft high.

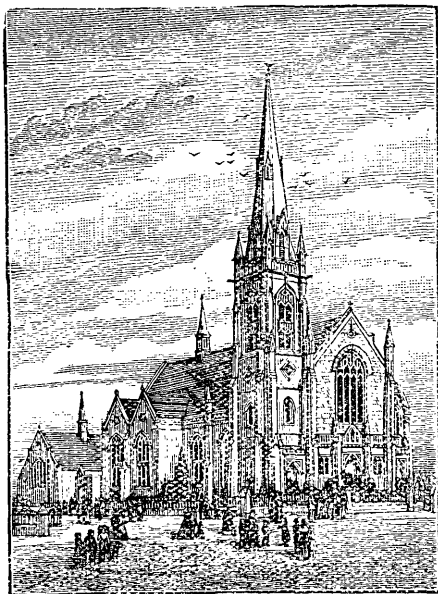

The chapel was built by the London Baptist Association, as their annual chapel for the year 1882, during the presidency of the Rev. C. Stanford, D.D., of Camberwell. The cost of the building, including the site, was about £4,700. There are new schools in the rear of the chapel.

249, St. Ann's Road, S. Tottenham, N., Aug 28th, 1894.

Dear Sirs,—I have great pleasure in testifying to the efficacy of your "Invalid Champagne" submitted to me for trial by Mr. Cushing. I administered it to a child in a state of extreme collapse from an attack of Influenza and Pleurisy. The result was marvellous. The smouldering embers of life seemed at once to burst into flame, and an uninterrupted recovery ensued.

I have no hesitation in saying that your "Invalid Champagne" is possessed of powerful stimulating and invigorating qualities, and cannot fail to be appreciated in all cases of debility, from whatsoever cause arising.

I am, yours faithfully, H. CLAYTON FOX, M.R.C.S., Eng., L.S.A., Lond.
