Introduction

The British Training Board was founded and developed by ex-service personnel to provide a Skills Translator Service for members of the UK Armed Forces and Veterans, allowing them to translate Military Qualifications into Civilian recognised qualifications. This is achieved usually without the need to attend further full training courses to repeat learning already achieved. There by freeing up essential time for Job search or administration.

How is it done?

The team will consider the Military Rank achieved, courses attended, experience in posts and future aspirations, they identify civilian recognised qualification for the 'Offer'. The offer is the individual List of Current 'Future Proof' Civilian Qualifications you have already achieved with your experience in the military.

The British Training Board is a working model

The British Training Board will provide Candidates a military and civilian skills translation service equipped with self-assessment tools, lifework modules, on-line training courses and a tutoring and mentorship support structure.

These are all focused on the development of Individual plans, specifically designed to deliver either vocational certainty in employment or development as an entrepreneur.

The British Training Board have established a commercial partnership arrangement with a selected group of personal development, training and qualification accredited organisations, this was to enhance the component parts of the British Training Board, specifically; a virtual learning environment and combined learning management system, course content and accreditation.

In establishing this collective capability, it has been specifically designed to ensure Candidates gain maximum recognition for prior learning and experience gained in the tri services and civilian employment via the Qualifications and Credit Framework (QCF). This ensures that their eligibility is subsequently maximised in terms of access to funding support - An example of potential individual funding support would be the Learning Credits system supported by the MOD or Service charities that are also currently looking for training providers to support. In this context, 'Customer 1' will be the individual Candidate and 'Customer 2', the organisation providing training support. Also, a simple direct payment arrangements will also be in place for those seeking a self-funded experience.
