About the Looking After the Kids Program

The Looking After the Kids Program aims to build community resilience through engagement and support for vulnerable young people and their families. It is one element of the Breaking the Cycle of Youth Crime plan which is about making Alice Springs' young people safer.

The program builds on strong community relationships to ensure best outcomes for young people by engaging and responding to those frequenting the streets late at night. It will be Aboriginal led, drawing on the cultural authority and advice of the Tangentyere Men's and Women's Family Safety Groups and Town Camp community members, who will provide support, recommendations and guidance.

The program aims to support young people through outreach, mentoring, referrals and other types of assistance.

'Help out all of the young people who are in town late at night.'

'Support families and communities to keep young people safe.'

'Talk to other services that support young people and their families.'

Acknowledgement of Country

The Looking After the Kids Program would like to acknowledge and pay respect to the traditional owners Mparntwe, the Arrente people.
